

Micro newsletters — the focused, high-engagement cousins of traditional email marketing — continue to outperform broader campaigns. Whether you're publishing a niche B2B digest or a personality-driven Substack, understanding open rate benchmarks in 2025 is essential for measuring real connection with your audience.

This guide breaks down what's normal, what's possible, and what you can do about it.

2025 Benchmark Landscape: What's Realistic?

Overall Email Benchmarks

Across industries, typical marketing emails average open rates between 20-30%. However, newsletters — particularly micro newsletters — operate in a different league. Because they target smaller, more passionate audiences, average open rates range between 40-60%.

In other words, the smaller and more personal your list, the higher your opens should be.

Micro Newsletter Averages

- New creators: 40-50%
- Growing newsletters (1k-10k subs): 45-60%
- Established niche newsletters: 60% or higher

These numbers reflect a balance of engaged audiences, trusted relationships, and consistent delivery.

Setting a Target for Your Newsletter

A good rule of thumb:

If your open rate is below 35%, something's off.

Either your subject lines need work, your list is cold, or your send timing isn't right.

If you're consistently above 55%, you're in elite territory — that means your readers look forward to your emails.

Metrics That Matter

1. Unique Open Rate

The percentage of subscribers who opened your email at least once.

Formula:

Unique Open Rate = (Unique Opens ÷ Delivered Emails) × 100

2. Click-Through Rate (CTR)

The percentage of delivered emails that received a click.

This shows how effective your content is beyond the open.

3. Click-to-Open Rate (CTOR)

Of those who opened your email, what percentage clicked something?

A strong CTOR signals that your message matched the expectation set by your subject line.

4. Unsubscribe Rate

Ideally below 0.5%. A spike signals a mismatch between what readers expected and what they received.

5. Deliverability Rate

The percentage of emails that reached an inbox. High deliverability (95%+) ensures your data is accurate.

□ Actionable Ways to Improve Open Rates

1. Craft better subject lines.

Keep them short, honest, and curiosity-driven. Ask yourself: Would I open this?

2. Be consistent.

Pick a day and time — and stick to it. Readers form habits, and habits drive opens.

3. Use a recognizable sender name.

People open emails from names they trust. Be human, not corporate.

4. Segment your list.

Send slightly different emails to different groups. Longtime readers might appreciate deeper insights, while new subscribers prefer quick wins.

5. Clean your list regularly.

Remove subscribers who haven't opened in six months. A smaller, engaged list always beats a large, indifferent one.

6. Personalize your preheader.

That small line of text beside the subject line can make or break an open. Use it to add context or intrigue.

7. Write like a friend, not a marketer.

Micro newsletters succeed when they sound like a conversation, not a campaign.

8. Test send times.

Your audience's rhythm might differ from global averages. Try morning vs. afternoon or weekday vs. weekend sends.

9. Respect your readers' time.

If you promise "5-minute reads," deliver them. Consistency builds trust — and trust drives opens.

10. Celebrate your subscribers.

Send special editions, shout-outs, or behind-the-scenes stories. Make readers feel like insiders.

Quick Checklist Before Every Send

- Subject line creates curiosity
- Preheader complements the subject line
- List segmented and cleaned
- Email tested on mobile
- Deliverability checked
- Message feels personal and relevant

- CTA clear and aligned with the reader's interest

Final Thoughts

For micro newsletters, the open rate is not just a number — it's a trust score. It reflects how much your audience values your insight, your tone, and your timing.

While big email campaigns chase broad reach, micro publishers win with intimacy. A 55% open rate on 1,000 subscribers often outperforms a 25% open rate on 100,000.

Focus on relevance, rhythm, and relationship. If your readers open your email with anticipation — not obligation — you've already won.
